Fratzoor

Quickguide

Fratzoor is an oldschool Step-Sequencer, which is full controllable via MIDI. So if you own a smartphone with touchosc or any hardware controller (bcf or nanokontrol..), fratzoor might become a good friend.

It was designed to build sliding monosynth (...or whatever) phrases very quick. Fratzoor gets triggered by your midikeyboard, so the note you play is always the Root-Key. There are two different modes (there are even more..like polyphonic sequencing) you could set Fratzoor to.

I like SoftIceCream

This is just a small Quickguide to explain a few important things....

The Gui is kind of selfexplaining...

A :

This is the whole Step

- octave-button
- note-pitch (range is one octave from c to c..12 semitones)
- velocity

- gate-slider (sets the length of the note for this step)
- shift-slider is the last one... you can shift the steps position of the sequence very smooth. (is a very important feature to create interesting sequences)

B:

- MIDI-Panic button on the top
- randomizers fot the specific lane

C:

- sync-speed with double- or half-button
- MODE :

   sets the MIDI-Mode for the incoming signals (the keys
   you hit on the keyboard)
   There is A,B,A+B and OFF

   A just gives out the internal generated MIDI not mixed with the midi you played.
   B lets pass the MIDI you played but the Sequencer is off
   A+B mixes the played MIDI with the internal generated MIDI.

- Mono on or off.. the common setting is mono on...
  connected with your synth in mono-Mode as well , combined with a bit of portamento.... but you could set to poly and experiment with it.. it,s possible to sequence chords and stuff....

- The Logo... if you click on TOK-TOK, theres one of the hidden features inside Fratzoor and Distel ;-P

So, have fun with these two... they are Free/Donation-
Ware.. i'm happy about any Donation and Feedback
