

UgaZara One Ver 1.0 Product Description

Background

UgaZara is a computer game that involves tossing four coins. It is played by one individual (the Human) against the computer. The Human and the Computer alternate in tossing the coins. Each toss results into points depending on the number of heads and tails. A toss can yield 10 points (4 heads), 8 points (4 tails), 6 points (2 heads and 2 tails), or 0 points (3 heads and 1 tail, or 3 tails and 1 head). The points are automatically added from toss to another. The first one to accumulate 100 points or more is the winner. This is a game to relax one's mind and does not require any skill or effort. The game outcome depends purely on luck or chance.

This game is adapted from a similar game popular with Uganda rural children in the 1960s and 1970s called zara, hence the name UgaZara. The game was played on the ground (in the soil) instead of a computer. It involved tossing 4 dry bean cotyledons instead of four coins. It involved two or more people and no computer was used. Like in UgaZara, the players alternated in tossing the bean cotyledons. Like in UgaZara, each toss resulted into points depending on the number of which sides of the bean cotyledon faced up. A toss can yield 10 points (4 inner sides), 8 points (4 outers sides), 6 points (2 inner and 2 outer sides), or 0 points (3 outer and 1 inner sides, or 3 inner and 1 outer sides). The points were manually added from toss to another. The first one to accumulate 100 points or more was declared winner. The game was thought to enhance summation skills of Uganda under children.
